Blue Collar Booms and American Mortality: Evidence from the Fracking Revolution (w/ Vivek Moorthy)

Abstract: We exploit the large, positive, and persistent labor demand shocks driven by the fracking boom to investigate whether a long-run increase in economic opportunities reduces mortality, particularly deaths of despair. Within a difference-in-differences analysis using variation in geological characteristics amenable to fracking, we confirm that the boom produces sizeable increases in earnings and employment for both men and women. While we find that overall mortality decreases (around 11 deaths per 100,000 people  $\approx 1.3\%$ ), these effects are not driven by significant reductions in external causes of mortality like suicide and drug overdoses. Along with evidence that health insurance coverage increases in the wake of the boom, these results suggest that increased economic opportunities can reduce overall mortality for treatable, internal causes of death.
